armed forces, of whatever political party, must evacuate a thirty-kilometer zone wherever Japanese troops are stationed in Siberia. These demands were made at the beginning of the session and it was asked that they be kept secret, but M. Vilensky, the special Soviet commissioner, gave themout to the press.

Publication of the demands brought out a statement from the Japanese command that in view of the publicity the Russians were giving the proceedings of the commission it has necessary to state the Japanese version of events in Siberia. The statement places responsibility on the Russian revolutionary command, which, it says, has not been willing to cooperate with the Japanese.
